TABLE 33

How do we know if you'll be a great fit for Table Thirty Three? The best way to know is by examining the following CORE VALUES that we want to be known for as an organization and as individuals. If you share these values (versus just needing a job) you'll be a great fit.

CRAFT

Investing in ourself and our craft may be the most profitable investment we could ever make. It yields not only future returns, but often a current pay-off as well. The surest way to achieve a better quality life, to be successful, productive, and satisfied is to place a priority on investing in both our personal and professional growth.

The effort we put into consistently investing in ourself plays a large role in determining the quality of our life now and in the future.

CHARACTER

The person who leads through character is focused on creating value and contribution rather than winning at all costs. Such a leader values openness and inclusion, shunning control and exclusion - the hallmarks of the leader who is driven by image.

Character is what is deep inside us; it's who we are on a daily basis, when things go well and when things go wrong. It's who we are in the boardroom as well as in our living room. We have reason to be proud when both reputation and character are a mirror image of each other. Abraham Lincoln put it this way: "Character is like a tree and reputation like its shadow. The shadow is what we think of it; the tree is the real thing."

COMMUNITY

We build and live into our community! Our economy cannot thrive without collaboration, without the wellspring of ideas and improvements that come from communities of people in boardrooms, coffee shops, and kitchens across the country and across the world. While a light bulb may go off in solitude, it often takes a community to execute it.

A community is not a clique, it is an organism that must evolve to survive, taking in new members, new friends, with new skills and interests and philosophies. A community is not me and my best friend telling each other everything, that is a relationship that is special, separate and good, but it is not a community. A community is a support network on a broader scale, a pool of inspiration, the cast of characters that color your life.
