

5 Luxury Travel Hotels That Give Back

Written by Andrew Sessa • November 20, 2015

10 PHOTOS

Sure, hotels today nod to giving back all the time. (Save water—reuse bath towels!) But in the last decade, a handful of properties have begun earmarking the profits of luxury travel to fund major philanthropic projects. And in an interesting twist, nonprofits are even opening hotels to support their charitable missions. By 2017, the Swedish arts nonprofit Wanås Foundation will open its estate grounds to a 14-room hotel; soon after, a Four Seasons will open in the Dominican Republic's El Seibo Province to boost the education and environmental initiatives of the sustainable tourism outfit Fundación Tropicalia. Until then, here are five best-in-class hotels you can book that are doing impressively high-impact work right now.